AMHS is delighted to welcome Brandon Lovering to the AMHS Career and Technology teaching team.

Mr. Lovering joins the AMHS faculty from Dorchester District 2 where he worked as a technology teacher. A native of Lakeland Florida, Mr. Lovering is a Marine Corps veteran who returned to Florida State University for a bachelors in Anthropology and later earned advanced education degrees from National University and Liberty University.

When asked what he most enjoys about teaching technology, Mr. Lovering spoke fondly about his first computer in the 1980's and how much fun he had disassembling and reassembling the pieces to rebuild it better. That inquisitive nature has translated into his current career which includes experiences teaching both science and technology classes. Mr. Lovering puts a high premium on transmitting his love of learning and discovery to students. "Being able to work with your hands and build things that can move, and you can interact with has always fascinated me." As the sponsor for six different robotics teams Mr. Lovering noted, "it was fun watching students design and build robots to solve problems and compete in increasingly elaborate competitions."

Outside of school Mr. Lovering is proud to be the husband of Heather and the dad of "Baby," their dachshund rescue dog. He is a certified master scuba diver, recent skydiving afficianado, and was recently named "biggest Star Wars nerd" by friends and co-workers.
